

The book was found

Listening To Battered Women: A Survivor-Centered Approach To Advocacy, Mental Health, And Justice (Psychology Of Women Book)

Synopsis

An in-depth, multidisciplinary look at the approaches of society to domestic abuse.

Book Information

Series: Psychology of Women Book

Hardcover: 184 pages

Publisher: American Psychological Association (APA); 1 edition (November 14, 2007)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 1433802392

ISBN-13: 978-1433802393

Product Dimensions: 6.3 x 0.8 x 9.1 inches

Shipping Weight: 15.2 ounces (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: 4.8 out of 5 stars 7 customer reviews

Best Sellers Rank: #313,545 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #114 in Books > Parenting & Relationships > Family Relationships > Abuse > Partner Abuse #766 in Books > Politics & Social Sciences > Women's Studies > Feminist Theory #1114 in Books > Medical Books > Psychology > Clinical Psychology

Customer Reviews

"This is a must-read book for anyone concerned with ending intimate partner violence against women. Goodman and Epstein provide a thorough and critical analysis of system responses to this problem followed by concrete recommendations for improvement. Throughout, survivors' voices and experiences are central. I will recommend this book widely." -- Cris M. Sullivan, PhD, Professor of Community Psychology, Michigan State University, Lansing

"This is an important book that refocuses contemporary mental health and legal advocacy for victims of domestic violence on the roots and principles of the early battered women's movement. The authors thoughtfully critique 'one-size-fits-all' responses to domestic violence. It is a book that will be useful to domestic violence advocates in a wide variety of fields." -- Elizabeth M. Schneider, Rose L. Hoffer Professor of Law, Brooklyn Law School; author of Battered Women and Feminist Lawmaking

Lisa A. Goodman, PhD, is an Associate Professor in the Department of Counseling, Developmental, and Educational Psychology at Boston College, and Coordinator of the Mental Health Counseling MA Program. She is the author of over 65 articles and book chapters on institutional and community responses to intimate partner violence; the effects of partner violence on marginalized women, including homeless, low-income, and severely mentally ill populations; and innovative community-based mental health practices for vulnerable populations. She has received grants from the National Institute of Justice and the National Institute of Mental Health to pursue research in these areas. Lisa is co-chair of the American Psychological Association's Task Force on Male Violence Against Women; co-founder of the ROAD (Reach Out About Depression) Resource Team, an advocacy project for low-income women struggling with depression in Cambridge, MA; and Director of Field Research for the Full-frame Initiative, an organization working towards social change for marginalized women. Deborah Epstein, JD, is a Professor of Law at Georgetown University Law Center, Director of the Domestic Violence Clinic, and Associate Dean for Clinical Education and Public Interest & Community Service Programs. She helped lead an effort to design and implement one of the nation's first specialized domestic violence courts in Washington, D.C., and served as Co-Director of the court's Domestic Violence Intake Center. Her scholarship analyzes contemporary efforts to reform systemic responses to those in abusive relationships, and suggests new ways to improve the legal system. She is Chair of the DC Domestic Violence Fatality Review Board, and has served on the DC Mayor's Commission on Violence Against Women, the DC Superior Court Domestic Violence Coordinating Council, and the DC Coalition Against Domestic Violence Board of Directors.

This book is one of the most important books on domestic violence to be published in the last 10 years. Lisa Goodman and her colleagues are doing truly innovative work to bring new insights to the problem of battering. They understand what many in the field still do not--that a woman's informal social networks and ability to gather financial resources are what really make a difference to long-term coping. Perhaps even more importantly, they understand that battering is a complex problem that affects each woman differently, depending on the other realities of her life. Their ideas for "bridge funds" as a new approach to services for battered women particularly has merit. Read this and then read everything else you can get your hands on by this team!

There are many books out there about intimate partner violence but none are as cutting edge as this one. This book is going to be helpful for all - from those who know little about the problem to those who are on the 'front lines' in the fight against violence against women. Goodman and Epstein are honest about the problems facing mental health providers, advocates, and those in the justice system, and they call for change on behalf of the women who need it the most - victims and survivors. The book provides an overview of the problem of IPV (its present and historical scope and impact), a comprehensive critique of each system's response within its own historical context, and future directions for us all to move in. It is full of important information and new ideas and most importantly, it's very readable. As a former domestic violence advocate, I see this as an important book for all of us in the field.

This is an absolutely wonderful book that covers key points of the survivor-centered approach to advocacy in the areas of: the Justice System, Mental Health, and Advocacy. It also provides a review of the background related to the battered women's movement/history.

I was impressed with how new the book was. It's brand new & alot cheaper than those sold at our bookstore.

This book proposes a radically new way of helping battered women: instead of requiring battered women to accept solutions that seem "right" to the experts but may not work for the women themselves, the women should be empowered to shape their own solutions. The book challenges advocates, prosecutors, and mental health workers to listen to battered women instead of dictating to them and to craft solutions that reflect the battered women's own needs and priorities. The authors point out that many current policies meant to protect battered women from their abusers -- such as mandatory arrest, "no drop" prosecution, enforced separation from the batterer, and so on -- may not reflect the woman's own priorities. Of course, all battered women want to end the violence, but they also want to preserve outside sources of income, keep their families together, maintain community ties, and avoid immigration problems, among other things. Many existing policies to help battered women (often designed with white, middle-class women in mind) interfere with these priorities and can actually discourage battered women from seeking help. It is time for the "experts" to realize that the woman herself is the best "expert" about her own needs. The authors begin their book by reviewing how three different groups -- domestic violence advocates, mental health workers, and prosecutors -- have attempted to help battered women over time. They trace how a Feminist approach that emphasized empowering the battered woman gradually evolved into a system in which experts and professionals force rigid solutions onto victims. The experts and professionals mean well, of course, but they are primarily accountable to constituencies other than the women (e.g., government agencies, funding sources, professional societies) and therefore cannot be flexible even when the solutions they are forcing on women are not working for them. The authors' solution: return battered women to the center of the process and let their voices be heard the loudest. This book represents the next generation of thinking about battered women and is a "must read" for anyone involved in helping domestic violence victims. I highly recommend it!

This book forced me to confront false perceptions I had about who the women being battered are and why they are being battered. These incidents are not occurring equally across all socio-economic groups. They are happening mainly to women of color at the lower end of the socio-economic scale. While it once made sense to frame this issue as something that happens to all women everywhere, so that the moral and political will could be built to address it, that notion is now clearly hurting the effort to deliver services to those that need them the most.

Any of us who are aware of and/or concerned about domestic violence walks in with a set of perceptions, biases, opinions . . . but very few of us bring a solid foundation in research and analysis of the topic. The authors have done a great job of assembling the key pieces to help us better understand the issue, the reasons that our current best efforts may not be the right ones, and offer alternatives that could have far more impact. I'd say that this is the best book on the topic that I've read.

Download to continue reading...

Listening to Battered Women: A Survivor-Centered Approach to Advocacy, Mental Health, and Justice (Psychology of Women Book) Public Health Nursing - Revised Reprint: Population-Centered Health Care in the Community, 8e (Public Health Nursing: Population-Centered Health Care in the Community) The Little Book of Biblical Justice: A Fresh Approach to the Bible's Teaching on Justice (The Little Books of Justice and Peacebuilding Series) Listening Visits in Perinatal Mental Health: A Guide for Health Professionals and Support Workers Reflecting on the Names of Jesus: Jesus-Centered Coloring Book for Adults (Jesus-Centered Devotions) Culture and Mental Illness: A Client-Centered Approach Battered Women and Their Families: Intervention Strategies and Treatment Programs, Third Edition (Springer Series on Family Violence) Compelled to Crime: The Gender Entrapment of Battered, Black Women It Could Happen To Anyone: Why Battered Women Stay Unwanted World: A Post Apocalyptic/Dystopian Survival Fiction Series (The EMP Survivor Series Book 4) (The EMP Survivor Series (5 Book Series)) ADHD: A Mental Disorder or A Mental Advantage (2nd Edition) (ADHD Children, ADHD Adults, ADHD Parenting, ADD, Hyperactivity, Cognitive Behavioral Therapy, Mental Disorders) Train Your Brain & Mental Strength : How to Train Your Brain for Mental Toughness & 7 Core Lessons to Achieve Peak Mental Performance: (Special 2 In 1 Exclusive Edition) The Big Book of Restorative Justice: Four Classic Justice & Peacebuilding

Books in One Volume (Justice and Peacebuilding) Texas Mental Health Law: A Sourcebook for Mental Health Professionals Psychiatric Mental Health Nursing, 5e (Psychiatric Mental Health Nursing (Fortinash)) Handbook of Forensic Mental Health Services (International Perspectives on Forensic Mental Health) Psychiatric Mental Health Nursing (Frisch, Psychiatric Mental Health Nursing) Psychiatric Mental Health Nursing, 3e (Psychiatric Mental Health Nursing (Fortinash)) Health Communication: From Theory to Practice (J-B Public Health/Health Services Text) - Key words: health communication, public health, health behavior, behavior change communications 5-CD Set for Wright's Listening to Music, 6th and Listening to Western Music, 6th

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help