The Friar's Map Of Ancient America 1360 AD: The Story Of Nicholas Of Lynn And The Franciscan Map Of America (Guernsey Museum Monograph, Multicultural Heritage Series No. 3)

Synopsis

English Franciscans mapped North America 1330-1360. The result was the first scientific map of the New World. Roger Bacon conceived the project; Pope Clement endorsed it in 1265; Oxford deans trained friars in surveying; and King Edward III launched the effort in 1360. Thus, Edward's great-grandson, Prince Henry of Portugal, knew the location of Florida in 1420. Contains hundreds of illustrations including the "Friar's Map" which the author found in 1995.

Customer Reviews

"A major contribution. Impressed with the scholarship. Exceedingly good argument." -- Vine Deloria
"Excellent. Powerful. Extremely interesting! Demonstrated and elucidated quite brilliantly. I am awed by his research." -- Ian Wilson
"Extremely important!" -- Thor Heyerdahl

Gunnar Thompson's research has resulted in discovery of the Omnibus Power Sign, evidence of Old World voyagers to America, and the lost "Friar's Map" of 1360--the first scientific map of the New World. A veteran of archeological excavations at Mesa Verde and Cahokia, Illinois, he has taught at several universities. A magna cum laude graduate from U.Illinois with high distinction in anthropology, he has an M.A. from U.Wisconsin in Anthropology and a Ph.D in Psychology. He is author of "American Discovery" and "NuSun."

A fairly convincing, if tedious, litany of anecdotal and circumstantial evidence for pre-Colombian contact and trade between the Old and New Worlds. The author's whole thesis hinges on the misidentification of magnetic north as geographic north. Yet the friar's main instrument was the astrolabe, which seems to refute the author's own argument. The author also has the annoying habit of classifying historians whose views differ from his as "orthodox."
